What is a Black Warrant?

A black warrant is an official legal document issued by the government authorizing the execution of a death sentence. Unlike regular warrants, a black warrant is specifically associated with capital punishment cases. It is issued after all legal avenues, including appeals and mercy petitions, are exhausted, and the sentence of death is finalized.

In India, the process of issuing a black warrant involves several steps:

- Confirmation of death sentence by the Supreme Court or High Court
- Approval from the Governor of the state
- Issuance of the warrant by the appropriate judicial authority
- Notification to the prison authorities, who then prepare for the execution

The Significance of Black Warrants in Indian Justice

The black warrant is the last formal step before executing a death penalty. It ensures that the execution is carried out legally and within the prescribed judicial procedures. The warrant specifies:

- The date and time of execution
- The name of the condemned prisoner
- The method of execution (usually hanging in India)

- Other pertinent instructions

The issuance of a black warrant is a highly sensitive process, often surrounded by legal, ethical, and human rights debates.
