Basil, cilantro, and dill are typical annual herbs that complete their life cycle within a year. They require direct sowing or indoor starting at specific times, dependent on the last frost date.

- Biennials

Parsley and some varieties of chervil are biennials, meaning they take two years to complete their growth cycle but often are grown as annuals for convenience.

Understanding these categories helps in aligning your planting schedule with the herb garden 2020 calendar to ensure each herb is given the right conditions at the right time.

Using the 2020 Calendar: Key Dates and Tips

- Last Frost Dates and Regional Adjustments

Your first step is to identify your region's last frost date in spring and first frost date in fall. These dates set the boundaries for outdoor planting. For example, in USDA Zone 7, the last frost typically occurs around April 15, while the first frost happens around October 15.

Tip: Use online frost date calculators or local gardening resources to pinpoint these dates for your specific location.

- Starting Seeds Indoors

Herbs like basil, cilantro, and chives benefit from starting indoors 4-6 weeks before the last frost date.

2020 Schedule Example:

- Start basil indoors: late March (around March 15-20) for transplanting in mid-April.
- Sow cilantro indoors: early March for transplanting in April.

- Transplanting and Outdoor Planting

Once the danger of frost has passed, transplant your seedlings or sow directly into the ground or containers.

2020 Schedule Example:

- Transplant thyme and rosemary: late April.
- Sow mint outdoors: early spring, as mint is cold-hardy.

- Maintenance and Pruning

Regular harvesting encourages growth. Use the calendar to mark ideal pruning times?usually just before flowering?to promote bushier growth and improve flavor.

- Harvesting

Most herbs are ready to harvest once they reach 6-8 inches tall. The best time is just before flowering for maximum flavor. The herb garden 2020 calendar will guide you on when to expect harvest windows based on planting dates.

- Overwintering and Saving Herbs

Certain perennials can be overwintered indoors or protected outside. Use the calendar to plan for protective measures like mulching or bringing herbs indoors in late fall.
